Subject: We would like to commission our website

To our designer,

We run Fig & Filter, the café on Chalk Lane. We have been open for two years, we roast our own coffee twice a week, and we bake everything we sell on the premises each morning. Until now, our web presence has been word of mouth and a chalkboard. It is time we had a website, and we would like you to build it.

What we want

A simple website with five pages: Home, Menu, Catering, About, and Visit. Two kinds of people should find it easy to use. The first is a stranger standing in the street with a phone, deciding whether to walk in — they need our hours, our address, and a reason to push the door. The second is an office manager at a desk, deciding whether to order catering for a meeting — they need our packages, our prices, and an easy way to reach us.

What we are not asking for

No online ordering, no table bookings, no newsletter sign-up. If someone wants a flat white, we would rather they came in.

What we will supply

Everything you need comes with this letter — you will not have to write or find anything yourself:

- The words for every page, written the way we talk. Please use them exactly as written; we would like the site to sound like us: warm, plain, and a little dry.
- Our photographs — the shopfront, the coffee, the food, and the two of us — already cropped and ready to place.
- Our brand colours, the same ones as our signage: deep fig purple (#4A2C4D) as our main colour, warm amber (#D9A441) for the occasional highlight, warm off-white (#FAF6F0) for the background, and a near-black ink (#221E1F) for the text. Please use these exact values and no others.

What matters to us

- The site must work properly on a phone. Most people will find us while standing on the street, not sitting at a desk.
- Our opening hours and address must be immediately easy to find, on every visit, without hunting.
- Each page should do its one job without clutter. We would rather leave something out than crowd the page.
- Nothing on the site should be invented. If it is not in the pack we gave you, it does not belong on our website.

What we will do when you deliver

We will open the site on our own phones, standing outside the shop. If we can find the opening hours within five seconds and the catering email within ten, you will have done well — and we will say so over coffee, on the house.

With thanks,

Mara Osei and Dev Nair
